The neurotrophins are peptides that have been implicated in a variety of neurological functions in the peripheral and central nervous system. This review focuses on the neurotrophins and their receptors, as well as the impact of the neurotrophins on the developing, mature and adult neuron. Finally, current and future applications of neurotrophins in neurophysiological, neuropharmacological, neurotoxicological, and neuropsychological applications are discussed.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to an improvement in a photographic copying apparatus and more particularly to an apparatus which more conveniently provides a light-tight support for a camera while photographing on a copying paper. 2. Description of the Prior Art There is already known, as disclosed in Japanese Laid-open Patent Application No. 61(1986)-77597, a portable copying machine including a housing accommodating therein a paper cassette, a feeding roller and a shutter releasing unit, an exposure device and a transfer roller, wherein the housing is integrally provided thereon a gear mechanism which is supported by a support member formed with a pair of slots, and which is driven to rotate by a motor disposed in the housing. The support member is rotatably mounted on the housing by a pair of pins passing through corresponding slot pairs. In the above copying apparatus, the support member is integrally formed with the housing and the slots. Thus, it becomes necessary to bring the support member into and out of engagement with the housing and to rotate the support member, so that the support member is rotated in the clockwise or counterclockwise direction so as to properly engage the support member with or disengage the support member from the housing and to properly engage the support member with or disengage the support member from the housing. In this connection, the pins are brought into and out of engagement with the slots, respectively. Therefore, the support member has to be rotated to bring the pins into and out of engagement with the slots, respectively, so as to be engaged with or disengaged from the housing, and this causes the support member to be rotated by a relatively large force, thus requiring a large driving force from the motor.Q: How to use the term "new" correctly?
